

IV. Research Log

(May 30–September 28, 2026)

The dated research log follows this page. It records the work in the order it happened rather than as a finished account, and it deliberately preserves what went wrong: conjectures that were tested and died, claims of the author's own that were later refuted, and software bugs that produced confident wrong answers before being caught.

It is included because a reader is entitled to see which conclusions were reached first and revised later, and because the superseded versions have been left in place rather than edited away.